Connections for massively parallel computers often require one or two-dimensional arrays of optical modules that can be used for optical memories and their applications for large DARPA programs.